Objectifs pédagogiques du cours :

Under the coordination of Guy Scoffoni (Professor, Sciences Po Aix), this course is co-taught by several visiting-professors from various universities on four different continents.

This innovative course is designed to provide the students with different approaches of the concept of "Democratic Governance": the American approach, the Latin American approach, the Asian approach and the European approach.

Through a comparative methodology, the presentations will put in perspective the different experiences of democratic governance and the role of the Rule of law in the globalization trends today.

A 15 page paper will be prepared during the first semester on a topic related to the presentations and discussed in class.

Contenu / descriptif du cours :

Globalization will be considered in a broad sense, going beyond economics, to include all processes, economic, political, legal, cultural, communicative, leading to interdependence in the world today. The question will be: how does globalization affect democratic governance and is a global concept of democratic governance emerging?

Several topics will be discussed:

- The new role of political organizations and social movements
- Pluralism and Elections
- The impact of Constitutions and the Rule of law
- The rise of judges and the access to justice systems in democratic governance
- The role of corporations in global governance: public-private partnerships
- Participation of transnational actors
- Civil society and participatory democracy
- New forms of governance: post-national governance
- Accountability in global democratic governance
- Legitimacy and democratic governance
